Calamity Jane Rides Again

"TED!" Janie began shouting the instant she rounded the corner on the way to Ted's house, just halfway up the block. "Ted! Look what I've got!" She waved a piece of paper in her hand as if that were all Ted needed to see to understand the wonderful thing that had just happened.

From the hammock on his front porch, Ted could hear Janie's excited exclamations and running footsteps, as she quickly covered the rest of the distance to his house. Then he saw her dashing up his front walk, and he stood up wearily as she bounded up the steps. This had happened so many times before!

Janie was so excited, all she could do was gasp for breath and wave the paper in Ted's face. Ted tried to be calm. "There, there, Janie," he said, "now just take it easy and sit down here and tell me all about it." He took Janie's arm and led her firmly over to the hammock.

But Janie was on her feet again. "Ted," she cried, "you don't understand! Don't you see this paper?" She shoved the small, yellow note under Ted's nose.

Ted looked at it cautiously. It was a learner's permit to drive that was made out to Janie! Ted looked at Janie cautiously. "You're going to learn how to drive?" he asked as calmly as he could.

"Yes," Janie grinned happily, triumphantly, "and you're going to teach me!"

Ted collapsed on the swing. He looked at Janie incredulously. "Oh, no!" he gasped. "Janie, no!" A dark suspicion stole over his features. "Janie, is this part of your plot to ruin me?"

"Ted," Janie said, deeply wounded, "how can you think such a thing? After all we've been through together, too!"

"That," Ted moaned, firmly seating Janie on the swing again, "is exactly what I mean." He hurried on before Janie could interrupt him. "Now be reasonable about this, Janie. You know you just aren't the mechanical type. Don't you remember when I was teaching you how to ride a bicycle? How you ran into the principal just as he was leaving the market with all his groceries?" Ted shuddered at the thought.

"Yes," Janie admitted easily, "but I learned how to ride, didn't I?"

Ted ignored her. "And the time you wanted to learn how to row? You lost both oars, and we had to wait all day for someone to rescue us!"

"Yes," Janie admitted again, "but I can row now, can't I?"

Ted groaned. "Be sensible, Janie. You don't really want to learn how to drive, do you?" he pleaded.

But Janie was getting angry now. She stood up. "Ted, either you teach me how to drive or we're through!" She stamped her foot and tossed her curly, black locks over her shoulder. When Ted saw the fire dancing in her green eyes, what else could he do?

"All right," he surrendered. "Is your father letting us use his car?"

"Well," Janie blinked her long eyelashes at him, "I'm sure Dad would let us, if I persuaded him enough. He trusts you so implicitly, you know. But, after all, Ted, it is a new car, and I'd hate to have you responsible just in case anything did happen. So I thought . . ." Her voice trailed off as her eyes wandered in the direction of Ted's prized jalopy parked in the driveway beside the porch.

Ted followed Janie's glance. "Oh, no!" he shouted. "Not that, Janie! Anything but that!" His eyes met hers, and she blinked her lashes soulfully at him again. Oh, well, he thought, his jalopy was dear to him, but Janie was even dearer. "All right," he muttered, "when do we begin?"

The next day was bright and shiny, and so was Janie. Ted provided the only gloom for miles around, as he steered his jalopy out onto a quiet country road to give Janie her first lesson. With great misgivings, he parked the car at the side of the dirt road and motioned Janie to step out.

He cleared his throat. "Now, Janie," he said calmly, "to begin with, this is what is known as an automobile."

"Yes," Janie said proudly, "I know."

Ted lifted the hood. "And this," he pointed, "is the engine." A cloud began to spread over Janie's face. "And this is the carburetor, and this is the radiator, and there are the spark plugs. Now when you turn on the ignition . . ."

"Ted," Janie interrupted impatiently, "I don't want to build a car. I just want to learn to drive." She seated herself back inside the jalopy.

Ted lifted his hands in despair, looked pleadingly at the heavens, closed the hood, and climbed in beside Janie. He took a deep breath. "All right, Janie," he said grimly. "Watch carefully." He released the hand brake, pressed the starter button, placed his foot on the clutch, shifted into first, stepped on the accelerator, and the car began to move. Then he shifted into second and third, drove on for a few yards, and parked again.

"Is that all there is to it?" Janie asked, pleased. "Why, I can do that. Let's change sides." She began to move toward the driver's seat.

"Just a minute," Ted said firmly. "Let me show you once more."

Janie looked a little pained, but Ted went through the motions again. Finally he relinquished his seat to her.

"Now stay calm, Janie," Ted urged, balancing himself precariously on the edge of the seat and nervously gripping the door knob. "Don't get nervous, and everything will be all right."

"Who's nervous?" Janie asked disdainfully as she blithely and smoothly started the car. "See?" she said. "I knew it was simple."

Ted was still holding his breath when Janie shifted into second, and a horrible grinding noise burst forth from the engine. "Put your foot on the clutch," Ted gritted through his clenched teeth.

"Oh, I forgot," Janie said in a small voice, jumping onto the clutch. But she was too late. The jalopy jerked spasmodically forward and backward, then stopped abruptly.

Ted pulled a handkerchief out of his breast pocket and wiped his forehead with unsteady fingers. "That," he said weakly, "is what is known as stalling."

"Is that all?" Janie asked, relieved, preparing to start the car again.

But Ted put a restraining hand on her arm. "Now, Janie," he said soothingly, "let's not overdo this thing. You've got the basic essentials now, so let's stop for today. I'll write all the instructions down for you so that you can study them tonight, and then tomorrow it'll be a lot easier."

"Well, all right," Janie said, a little disappointed. "But tomorrow's lesson will have to be longer. Okay?"

Smothering a groan, Ted nodded and turned the jalopy homeward.

A week later Ted, much to his surprise, had to admit that Janie was progressing. He still hadn't been able to convince her of the importance of learning about the engine, but at least she could drive the jalopy without stalling too often, and once he'd even let her drive through the center of town without any disastrous results. Today, he decided, he'd teach her how to back into a parking space. Janie was overjoyed when he told her, so he headed the car to the center of town, found a fairly large parking space on the main street, and demonstrated very carefully how to get into and out of it.

Then he relinquished the driver's seat to Janie, and they drove around the block once. Luckily, the large space was still there. "Now just go slowly and keep your head," he told Janie, "and everything will be all right."

Janie was exceptionally attentive today. She backed into the space without doing anything wrong. Ted congratulated himself for being such a good teacher. "Now," he said, pleased, "be just as careful driving out, and we'll find a narrower space to try."

Janie shifted into first and let the car go forward. Suddenly Ted realized she'd forgotten that she had to back up first. They were getting uncomfortably close to the car in front of them, and a man had just opened the door and was stepping into it.

"Reverse!" Ted shouted. "Reverse!" But he was too late. With an abrupt jolt, his jalopy locked bumpers with the car ahead, and the man fell to the ground. Ted slapped his hand to his forehead, closed his eyes, and heard someone shouting, "Police! Police!" He might have known. Everything had been going too well. Quickly he opened his eyes.

But what had happened? There were two policemen dragging away the man who'd been getting into the car ahead of them, and there was Mr. Mueller, the owner of the jewelry store on the corner, a broad smile on his face, babbling away at Janie, shaking her hand hysterically, and offering her a reward. Ted's eyes opened wide.

"Thank you," Mr. Mueller was saying. "Thank you! That was quick thinking, young lady. If it hadn't been for you, that crook would have gotten away with half the jewelry in my store! You can have anything you want. Anything!" He went back to his store.

"Janie," Ted asked incredulously, "did you do that on purpose?"

"What do you think?" Janie answered mysteriously. "Why don't you pick something out for me, Ted? Something like a special chain for a jalopy key—with my name engraved on it?" She innocently blinked her long lashes at Ted.

What else could Ted do? He walked resignedly into Mr. Mueller's jewelry shop!

Reduce SAFELY!

WHETHER OVERWEIGHT

10 Pounds or 100 Pounds

Good news for fat people! Now take off up to 7 pounds the first week without danger to health! If you are a normally healthy man or woman, the medically proven Protam Plan will do wonders for your appearance, even if you have been burdened with unwanted fat for years! (Illness excepted.)

MEDICAL RESEARCH PROVES PROTAM PLAN IS TWICE AS EFFECTIVE AS 1200-CALORIE DIET!

More than 100 overweight men and women were scientifically studied under average home conditions for many months by a world-famous medical university, large New York hospital, and a nationally known medical consultant. Their research proved Protam is SAFE. While following the Protam Plan, weight-loss was indicated from the very first week. Weekly examinations showed no harmful effects while reducing. Over a period of 33 weeks the weight loss under the Protam Plan was double that achieved by 1200-calorie diet in the same period of time! Here's how Protam works: it appeases the appetite to eliminate the hardship of reducing, and supplements the system with proteins and amino acids for long lasting energy.

You Can LOSE up to 16 Pounds for Less Than $2.50
